January 26 2026...

by Matthew Huntington

I
"James Hunt and Ben'Jara Hussein please report to the Civilian Entry Dock" the P.A. blared so budly that James spilled his soup. Walking quickly, he caught up with the commander of Red 1. (one of the best squadrons, second only to James's Blue 1) "What's up?" Ben shrugged, and they both hurried to the CiED.

"Hello lieutenants," the captain on duty there said, "Awfully sorry to disturb your lunch." "No problem, sir," was the reply from Ben, who had hastily tromped on James' soggy toes to prevent an outburst. "What's up?"

"You've gotta escort the new super snooper-loyalty agent-around the premises."

Now James exploded "What?!! Now just wait a second. I've got flying escort duty to do, and both of us have to do outpost checks in fifteen minutes. Can't you draft someone else?"

The captain shrugged "can't help it. I can't get anyone equal or above my station, and she won't take anyone lower, and I had a hard time convincing her to take you guys. You'll have to take her along on the outpost checks and get someone else for the flying escort." He paused, "You've got ten minutes to get ready."

The captain started to leave. Ben'jara stopped him. "What if the Elstars pick today to attack?" he asked.

"Then you go up and leave her behind," was the reply.

"Looks like that's our only way out," James said as they went to change into space suits.

II
She was just as bad as they expected. As they came in she said "Hello. Well? Let's go." in a voice that reminded

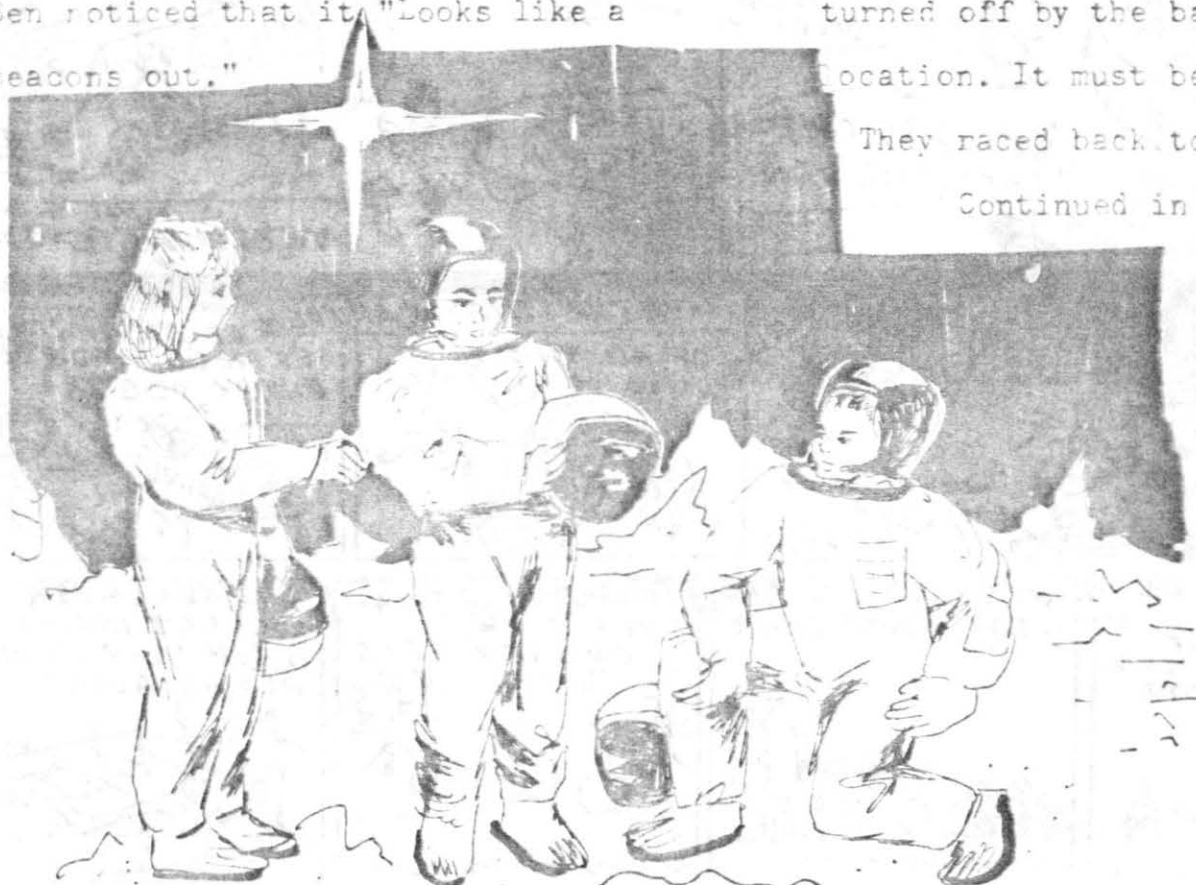

Ben of a python's. She was of middling height, but that's all you could tell due to the spacesuit. They quickly walked over to the hovercraft bay, James leading the way, without anyone saying anything. Selecting a wedge shaped one, James climbed in. As Ben helped her in, he politely inquired, "Do you know anything about this model, Mrs. uh-" "Heild. Of course I know. I'm not stupid, you know. Let's leave. What are you waiting for, anyhow?"

James bit back his temper. "We're waiting for clearance" They soon got it, and the hovercraft sped off. After a little while out, Ben noticed that it "Looks like a beacons out."

James looked out to the left and quickly replied with a "You're right." and then said "Excuse me, Miz Heild" and rammed the craft into a solid wall of ice and stone, and the craft bounced off and settled to the ground. "Was that truly necessary?" asked a very annoyed loyalty agent. "No, but it's fast." was the quick reply as James jumped out with the tool kit and started jogging toward the beacon. Half a minute later, he came back at a dead run. "What's up?" Ben asked. James jumped in and started the engine. "It's been turned off by the base to prevent location. It must be an attack!"

They raced back toward base.

THE END?

© 1983 BY SEAN D. ROSS

I had come home after a hard day's work at the office. I greeted my wife and proceeded to turn on the television set to watch the evening news. I sat back in my lazy-boy reclining chair with a beer and a bag of yum-yim potato chips. The news came on.

I really wasn't interested in the news, I told myself as I started to fall asleep.

I was suddenly awakened by a slight wetness caused by the beer falling on my lap.

As I got a towel to clean up the mess, I listened to the news. There was a strange prowler prowling around my neighborhood. I laughed thinking, "don't they have anything better to report about?" Probably some peeping tom type weirdo.

I then ate dinner, and then my wife and I watched the football game. I retired early.

About three o'clock in the morning, (Christmas morning) I heard a noise from downstairs. I put on my robe and walked downstairs. I walked into the living room.

I couldn't believe my eyes. I ducked under the drapes so "HE" wouldn't see me.

I waited until he had gone and ran upstairs. I climbed in bed. "Who was it?"

my wife asked. "Nothing, dear" I answered, "Go to sleep, dear." I laid my head on my pillow.

I did not know if it was my imagination, but as I was dosing off, I thought I could hear the slight jingling of sleigh bells and reindeer hoofs running around on my roof.

I carefully got up and looked out of my window to see a red sleigh being pulled by 8 reindeer. "HO, HO, HO, HO, HO, HO" He laughed. The funny little man inside the sleigh winked at me, and rode off into the distance. "Merry Christmas!"

The lord is My shepherd; I shall not want.

He maketh me to lie down in green pastures: he leadeth me beside the still waters.

He restoreth my soul: he leadeth me in the paths of righteousness for his name's sake.
