THE ADVENTURES OF MARTIN ROSS

by STEPHAN OSBORNE

Martin Ross was a tall, gawky, 16 year old. His hair was drab and unmanageable, in the unusual, unappealing shade of dark red. Being rather weak and uncoordinated, he turned his attention to intellectual pursuits (pardon my language). When he entered the Nu Sect's * powerful army in a beginner's recruiting program, he had hoped to get a place for himself in nuclear fusion engineering. But this niche was already filled, and he found himself placed in interstellar exploration.

Martin was indifferent to the subject at first, but the technical training appealed to him. Throwing himself wholeheartedly into the boiling vat of new knowledge, he quickly learned the theory of a six-stage booster engine that would allow fast, self sustained space travel over a prolonged period.

"Enjoying yourself?" Marie asked.

"As much as possible", Martin said in a dark voice, grimacing as he pushed the canoe away from a head on collision with a protruding stump.

"Oh, it's not that bad", Marie replied. She was stretched out in the middle of the vessel in a bikini, soaking up as much sun as possible.

"Oh, yes -mmph! We're having -urg! just a wonderful -heave! - time", said Robert Brask, Martin's long term friend, as he strained against the current to move another inch upstream.

"Oh, relax. We'll hit calm waters in a couple of minutes."

Martin and Robert groaned, looking at each other. Marie giggled from under her hat and sunglasses.

But, Marie was right, for once. They reached a wide, placid, slow moving area. Martin and Robert hitched the canoe up to a tree while Marie set herself up on the beach. After taking a brief dip to wash off the sweat, the two boys joined Marie.

There was silence for a long time.

If I relax any more, Martin thought, I'll slip into a coma. The sun struck sparkles into his eyes, scattered from intercepting the calm, rippling waters of the river. A slight wind cooled his face as it brushed from shadow to shadow. The leaves of the summer trees rustled softly, and tall grasses waved a gentle welcome to the wind as it passed by. Puffy cotton dabbed at the sky's unblinking blue eye, but otherwise the unblemished face was clear.

* The Nu Sects are a powerful military faction formed a few years before the destruction of Terehan.

Finally, Marie broke the silence softly.

"Martin, do you know Senan Ostoff?"

"The guy who has my job?"

"Yeah."

"Not personally."

"That doesn't matter. He's made some weird kind of spaceship for interplanetary travel."

"He has?" Martin sat up suddenly.

"Yeah. And you're supposed to test it."

"It hasn't been tested? UH-UH!" He put his hand up as if to stop her words from reaching his ears. "Noooo way. I'm not going on any ships with unstable reactors." He started to back away from her.

"Honey, you have been in intersteller training; and someone has to do it."

"That little slime is trying to get rid of me. The competition."

"He didn't say that. And he's a nice person, in person. Personally I don't think he was trying to harm your person." She giggled.

"Anywho, I'm coming with you."

"Oh. Well, in that case..."

He was interrupted by a horde of rampaging quartz particles, from the general direction of Robert's (almost) placid form.
